

Wyoming Requirement Changes for Designated Home State will begin June 30, 2014. This will affect renewals and new application received on or after this date.

Note: individual currently licensed, new applicants or renewing licensees are still required to have a designated home state. New Mexico is not accepted as a Designated Home State as of July 1, 2013.

Wyoming is tentatively scheduled to implement the ADHS rules with Sircon and NIPR in February and the electronic process may go into production in July. Wyoming Department of Insurance has reviewed all licensing states and has determined that certain states will be accepted as a DHS state. These states meet Wyoming statutory requirements.

26-9-219. Adjuster's license; exception; notification

d) If the state in which the adjuster maintains his principal place of residency or principal place of business does not license adjusters for the line of authority being applied for, the adjuster shall designate his home state, which may be any state in which the adjuster is licensed and in good standing and which state meets licensure requirements similar to the requirements of the state of Wyoming as determined by the commissioner.

This list may change due to the ever changing adjuster license type. In addition, this applies only to individuals that reside in a state that does not license adjusters or staff adjusters. Wyoming is reciprocal with all resident states in which an individual holds a resident adjuster license. The individual designated home state will only meet Wyoming statutory requirements if they have passed an exam, completed a background check and complete CE in the designated home state. An individual must hold the correct license type for the state they have designated. The Department will verify with the PDB that the licensee holds the correct license type. A licensee is not allowed to hold multiple DHS license types.
